Corcraft is economical. By law, Corcraft's prices "shall not exceed a fair and reasonable market price." But net costs to eligible buyers will generally be lower because Corcraft's customers do not have to spend time and dollars soliciting competitive bids. A 1987 study by the Institute for Economic and Policy Studies (Alexandria, Virginia) found that "there are clearly savings in the processing time involved in purchasing through correctional industries versus the private sector. On the average...it takes purchasing agencies approximately nine more days of professional time and two and one-half additional days of clerical staff time to procure a product through the competitive bid process... As one respondent expressed, 'Purchasing directly through correctional industries enables purchasing personnel to forgo the competitive bid procedures, which can be lengthy.' At average annual salaries...the time savings may be translated into $215 per day...total savings per each procurement equal $1,415." Furthermore, eliminating the average three to four months it takes to award bids means delivery to the customer is that much faster.
